

Introduction

The U.S.A.'s civil rights movement started in 1954 and ended in 1968. Black people were not treated as well as white people by a lot of white people. They were not allowed to share the same water fountains, schools, churches, hospitals and a lot more. The Black people's stuff was not as good as white people's stuff. The black people will not stand for this. So there is something called the U.S.A. Civil rights movement where Black people will stand up for their rights.

Race discrimination and segregation

Race discrimination and segregation are two very big subjects. Race discrimination affects more than Black and white people; it also affects people with different appearances and genders. Race discrimination for Black people would be treating them differently purely because of the color of their skin. A lot of white people treat Black people very poorly. Race segregation is separating Black people and white people and not letting them have the same stuff. That is race discrimination and segregation.

Rosa Parks and the bus boycott

Rosa Parks was born in 1913 and died in 2005. She was an activist in the civil rights movement and refused to give up her seat to a white person. At the time it was the law that Black people had to give up their seat to a white person. She got put in jail just because of that. She was bailed by Edgar Ndgar, Clifford and Virginia Durr. Her arrest started something called the bus boycott. This bus boycott is where Black people did not take the bus. They did this because the bus couldn't get as much money. The boycott lasted 13 months. Finally the black people won the bus boycott.

Conclusion

Why just why do Black people get discriminated more than white people? Without the civil rights movement Black people would be treated like they were 60 years ago. We would still be separated and Black people would still be treated unfairly. Without civil rights activists like Rosa Parks we would not have the bus boycott. Without the bus boycott Black people would still have to give up their seats. Things are better but we still have a long way to go.
